

Is helping others care for children in the home considered employed?

Yes. Nannies and babysitters who help others care for children in the home and receive compensation considered employed. However, grandparents who care for their own grandchildren and do not receive compensation are not considered employed.